No Throttling of Enterprise!

Every major advance in the economic welfare of the American people has come from the fact that some new idea, new invention, new development in production, distribution, organization, or management challenged and, perhaps, supplanting some existing enterprise. It is imperative, therefore, that the business regulations of government shall not freeze the status quo against the rise of new ideas and methods.

Many New Deal policies and practices, as in the case of the NRA, have sought to hold things as they are. This has grown out of the fact that, as a part of its defeatist convictions that we are approaching a static economy, the New Deal leadership has been so obsessed with its theories of stability that it has neglected the problem of growth.

The competition of the new with the old is the most important form of competition. If the business program of government is to be based, as this Committee think it should be based, on a system of competitive enterprise, operating freely within a frame work of protective regulations designed to safeguard the general interest, then government must not fall into the dangerous practice of intervening to protect special interests against new forms of competition. To do so is to deny to society as a whole the benefits of new developments and to deny to individuals the right to rise by their resourcefulness and ingenuity.

A cardinal principle of a regulatory system that is to promote rather than depress enterprise is that its regulations should be definite and easily ascertainable. The greatest deterrent to enterprise in regulation is uncertainty. Here is nothing more discouraging to enterprise than inability to discover whether and how it may act and whether, if it acts successfully, it will be permitted to succeed.

There should be some general procedure in all regulatory agencies that will insure to every person or group subject to regulation a fair and full opportunity to be heard in his or its behalf. There should likewise be some standard policy applicable in all regulatory agencies, respecting the right of appeal to the courts from decisions of administrative authorities. Today, in certain cases, the courts have broad powers of review, both to fact and law, while in others their reviews can cover only questions of pure law or the abuse of discretion. Some ordered policy should be substituted for this administrative variety.

Might Makes Right

Might makes right was the law of the jungle when man was young and more savage than the beasts that inhabited it with him. That state of affairs was not at all so very wrong for then the world was young, and man was then by no means lord of creation. But today there is no will-beast that disputes his sway as lord of the earth. Having developed a domineering attitude modern man seeks to conquer his own kind to prove that his branch of the specie is superior to that of the others.

The "civilized" world is today almost wholly an armed camp, and a large part of it is at war. The British Empire, France and Germany, at at war. These great nations should be the very heart of our civilization and be noted for the arts of peace and culture. Instead they today are doing their best to annihilate each other. These nations each on upon America as a newcomer and too young to have had time to develop a culture of its own, thus inferior. But America is not deceived. The old-world may have a culture but it is a thing of intrigue, trickery and deceit. We may be young as a nation but we are old enough to see the childish selfishness of "superior" old world culture—it is what in the pariance of the street corner a lot of baloney.

What will come of the present war in Europe? To settle that question: one must know why there is a war, and if you can really answer that you know a lot more than the highest mer of the nation. The closest any-guess is that Hitler thinks the English empire is near its end and that the French are in their dotage too and he (Hitler) has visions of Germany in the sun.

The dream of empire is today a universal curse. It infects the Italian, Mussolini, Stalin, and Japan's war-lords. There have even been trends in government here in America that are most decidedly new. America is the last haven of democracy in the world today. Perhaps we are destined to be its savior not by going over seas and fighting others wars but by staying out of them and minding our business—that's about all there is to international democracy any-now. There are more pressing problems here at home that the old-world dreams of empire, and why should we waste our substance and the lives of our youth fighting their wars? Our preserve is right here not in the old world, also here is our future.

An intelligent picture of the true state of conditions based on developments in Europe is unless the wind changes soon Mr. Hitler is about right and Japan and America are going to fight it out to see who is boss in our part of the earth. The Japs are waiting for a chance to go busy and if we are fools enough to become involved in Europe's quarrel there is a good chance we will see America drenched with blood. This might not be so bad, terrible as it would be, but for the vast nation of the north—Russia. What she will do if and when the other nations have weakened themselves is far from being an abuse problem.

At the solicitation of many friends and citizens, I have decided to enter the contest for the nomination for the Republican candidate for Sheriff of McDowell county, subject to the primary to be held May 14.

Having been born in Bland County, Virginia, in 1888, I came to McDowell County in 1905, and have since resided during these years I have held the office of tax-collecting deputy sheriff for thirteen years, and mayor of Keystone for 6 years.

In these positions I have conscientiously striven to deal fairly with all regardless of church, or political affiliation, nationality or station in life, and should my present objective be realized there will be no change in this policy.

I am an ex-service man of the recent World War.

I hope to see you personally before the primary, but should I not be able to do so I shall appreciate your support just the same.
